Castro Will Fall of His Own Weight

EDITOR:

For what it's worth, for me and my money, I'll go along with the President, the Pentagon and the National Security Council regarding the policy on Cuba; said policy being influenced by way of our Central Intelligence Agency. If we cannot have confidence in such sources, from what sources may we expect more reliable information or advice?

We condemned unanimously the action of the USSR in their military coup of Hungary. Should we be guilty of a similar coup?

Isn't it more practical and sensible to continue economic pressure and exercise patience? Castro will inevitably fall of his own weight, as will communism. After all this subject is a matter of principle. Any state should have the privilege to choose their own form of government so long as it is not a threat to our own security. We took care of that threat when we demanded Khrushchev to pull out his intercontinental missiles.

Since we've heard so much about our unenforceable Monroe Doctrine, it is unenforceable because in principle it is as dead as a dodo bird because the U.S.A. has itself troops in every hemisphere under the sun and we think we are justified.
